Two injured in hit-and-run

Man calls police to say he may be driver sought

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Two men on a bicycle were struck by a hit and run driver shortly after midnight on Friday night, but a man who said he may have hit them called police Sunday evening from a West Sacramento church to report his possible role in the accident.

The two victims remain hospitalized, said Sgt. Don Cox of the West Sacramento Police Department.

Scott Alan Edadiz, 22, of West Sacramento, is in serious but stable condition with injuries to the head, face, leg and arm. Cory Alan Pryor, 19, of West Sacramento (who was apparently riding on the bicycle's handlebars) is in good condition with abrasians, contusions and a possible back injury.

The pair were struck on Rice Ave.

Sunday evening, a man called police to report he had possibly struck a subject on bicycle early Saturday morning. The man, calling from a West Sacramento church, had apparently decided to make the call after talking to his pastor.

Police obtained a statement from the man and are continuing the investigation, but have not made an arrest.

Port considers marina on river

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

A marina development company has floated a proposal for a "dry stack storage marina" on Port of Sacramento land adjoining the Sacramento River. The proposal -- still preliminary -- has thus far been well received.

"We're engaged in conversation with a company called Westrec," said John Sulpizio, director of the port. "They have brought forward a conceptual proposal to build a dry stack storage marina east of the locks."

At such a marina, said Sulpizio, the boats -- typically powerboats 15 to 35 feet in length -- are stored on shelves and moved by forklift.

"The owner calls ahead when he plans to use the boat and they take it to the water and set it in."

The marina would be located on the southeast side of Stone Lock, where the port's man-made barge canal enters the Sacramento River. Access would be from South River Road near Jefferson Blvd. and the bridge over the locks. The locks, rarely opened in recent years, separate the river from the port's turning basin and the deep water channel route to the Delta.

Sulpizio reported that discussions with Westrec are still early and vague, but that the company could lease the property from the port and build and operate the marina and marina supply services. The company has a development at the Tower Marina north of Stockton and is contracted to build a $60 million, 80-acre marina and retail complex at the Port of Los Angeles in a joint venture with Cole Development Company.

Sulpizio said port staff will be making a proposal to the port's governing commission on Sept. 14, and it appears that staff will recommend the port continue discussions with Westrec.

Gas main struck on Fifth Street

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Workers ruptured a gas main along Fifth St. in West Sacramento Saturday evening, leading to a several-hour effort to fix the resulting gas leak.

"We had a backhoe dig into a gas main over there," said Division Chief Mike Collins of the West Sacramento Fire Department. "We were over there in the immediate vicinity for two and a half hours."

Collins said a one-inch gas pipe was ruptured during the work effort, done by a private contractor as part of the city's Fifth St. widening project in the Broderick neighborhood. No one was evacuated, although neighbors in a nearby trailer park were asked to turn off their gas appliance pilot lights until the situation was under control.

West Sac athlete mines silver

While attending the University of California at Davis in the early 1980s, West Sacramento's John Disney decided to take up the sport of rowing.

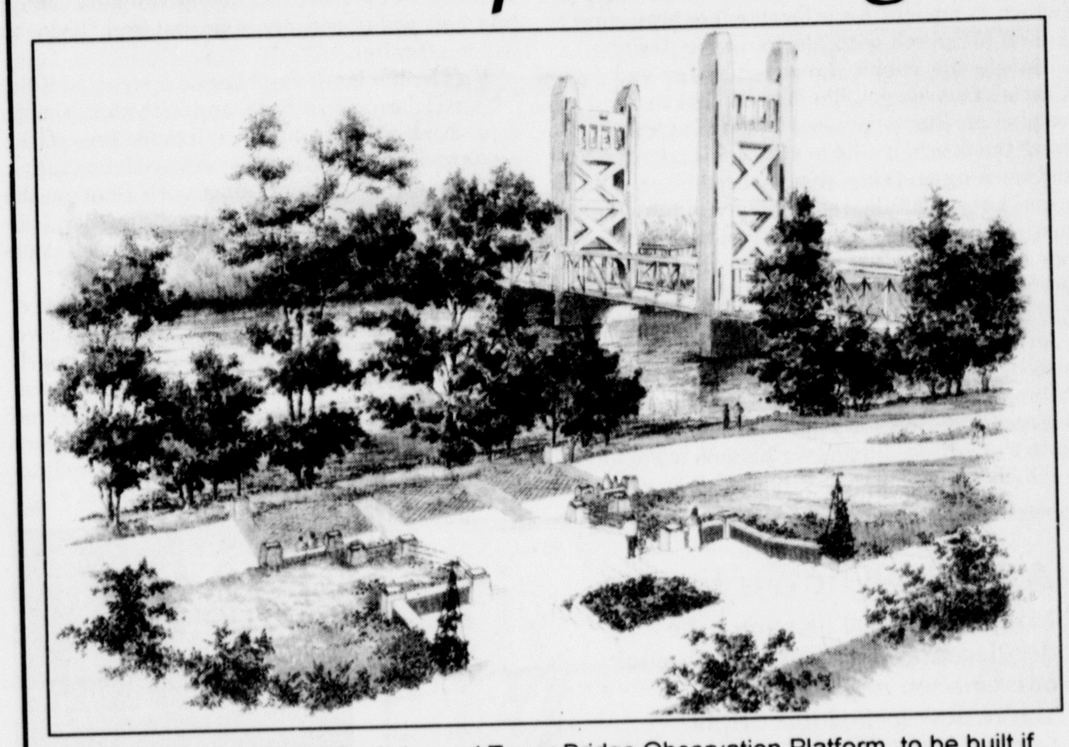

"I really like to compete and I wanted to stay in shape," explained John, "and rowing seemed a great way to do both. At the time, it just seemed like a cool sport to get involved with, and little did I know that it would become

ARTIST'S RENDERING of planned Tower Bridge Observation Platform, to be built if funding is available as part of city's riverfront promenade, Phase II

From Art Schroeder
West Sacramento
Redevelopment Agency

Following its first phase grand opening this month, River Walk park will soon enter a new phase of development. The West Sacramento City Council has awarded Sierra National Construction of Carmichael a $2.7 million contract to construct the Phase II improvements. The contract provides for the continuation of the River Walk promenade and the addition of several park features that, when completed, will enable visitors to enjoy all aspects of the riverfront right up to the river's edge.

Sierra National is well known on the Sacramento riverfront, having built the popular Riverbank Marina and completed river access projects for the city of Sacramento.

In July, the City Council authorized the solicitation of bids for construction of Phase II of the riverfront improvements. The scope of work was divided into the base bid and a series of add-on alternatives, contingent upon available funding and access rights. The base bid work included extending the River Walk promenade from G Street to E Street, riverside landscaping improvements from the Tower Bridge to E Street, and renovations to the Broderick Boat Ramp. Among the "add" alternatives figured in the bids were the Tower Bridge Observation Plaza, the south River Walk Plaza and Ramp, and the impressive Grand Staircase, which will face the river and provide pedestrian access directly to the river.

The city accepted construction proposals under a blind bid process. The identity of the companies making bids was held in confidentiality as licenses, qualifications and references were checked by city staff. Three eligible bids were submitted, but one company was granted a removal from the process after discovering an error in its original proposal. The city council awarded the contract to the lowest responsive bidder, Sierra National Construction, for $2,690,621. Funding sources include the city's capital improvement program, the Raley's Landing Assessment District and a grant from the state's Department of Boating and Waterways.

Kip Skidmore, president of Sierra National, was delighted about the project's designs.

"(River Walk) is well thought out," he said."It's not concrete. It's appealing aesthetically. It shows a real appreciation for the river."

In addition to developing the Riverbank Marina -- home to Chevy's, Woody's and Crawdad's -- Sierra National has worked with the city of Sacramento on waterfront improvements, including Miller Park. The company was founded in 1979.

The project is expected to be finished by next summer.

Sports retailer arrested Tuesday

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

A West Sacramento man was arrested Tuesday for making and selling professional sports paraphenelia in violation of patent and trademark laws. The man was charged with a similar felony offense last year, said Sgt. Don Cox of the West Sacramento Police Department.

Michael Gonzalez, 39, was jailed yesterday after police served a search warrant at his store, Good Tymes, at 500 Harbor Blvd.

"We seized quite a bit of sports merchandise," said Sgt. Cox.

The store was trading in items related to teams in professional baseball, basketball and football, he added. Private investigators hired by the sports leagues helped assemble information in the investigation.

No one at the store could be reached for immediate comment.

Water quality problems at canal

Nitrogen emissions threaten aquatic habitat at Port

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Water quality at the Port of Sacramento and deep water channel faces a chronic problem of too much nutrients -- leading to too much algae growth and not enough oxygen for fish, said Richard McHenry, an inspector for the California Regional Water Quality Control Board.

"We have a cease and desist order on the Port of Sacramento for the discharge of fertilizers from their loading and unloading operations and moving it around the facility," McHenry stated. "Everytime it rains a lot, (the fertilizers) get washed into the port."

The UNOCAL facility, which operates its own shipping pier for handling fertilizer west of the port, is also undergoing enforcement for nitrogen releases.

"The discharge of fertilizer into the deep water channel has several effects," McHenry said. "The most worrisome is that it is toxic to fish when it's in the

1994 'cease and desist' order to lift

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

The state may lift a longstanding "cease and desist" order against West Sacramento for sewage treatment violations, in the belief that problems at the city treatment plant have largely been solved.

Removal of the order has been publicized, and members of the public have been invited to submit comments to the Regional Water Quality Control Board by Sept. 4 if they have any concerns about it.

"I have not received a single comment, so I assume it's going to be on the 'uncontested' calendar" for board action, said Richard McHenry, an inspector for the water agency.

McHenry, who was involved in efforts throughtout the early 1990s (as well as the 1994 "cease and desist" order) to get the city to fix problems at the South River Road plant, said West Sacramento has "made great strides" at the facility in instituting a new treatment process.

"Over the past year, the city has established a pretty good record," he said. "It's a real success story."

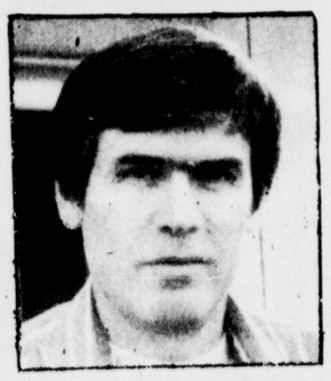

McHenry added that there has been no sign of the previous pattern of frequent "upsets" at the plant during the summer-

It's a good thing to love all creatures great & small

Editor's note: Daryl is taking a few weeks vacation from column writing. Here is one of his favorites from the past.

My Back Pages

By Daryl Fisher

When you have as many kids as I do, I guess it's only normal that one of them would turn out to be an animal lover. In fact, when my daughter, Carrie, first began to show an affinity for all creatures great and small, I even encouraged it. I mean, what could be more healthy than a young girl learning to appreciate and care for some of nature's cutest and cuddliest creations?

So, over the years, and with my blessing, Carrie has collected Nicky and Shadow the dogs, Hopper and Boogie the rabbits, Little and Little Patty the lovebirds, and Barney and Beverly the goldfish.

One of the toughest lessons any animal lover must learn is that most pets have a somewhat shorter life span than their owners and Nicky, Hopper, and Little have all passed away. Barney is also currently taking medication for a fin disease which has forced him to spend most of his time spinning upside down at the top of the tank, and Little Patty, who is almost seven-years-old (which is ancient for a lovebird) is beginning to fall off her perch with alarming regularity.

Boogie the rabbit, however, is far and away Carrie's favorite pet, having been left on our doorstep as an Easter present by her boyfriend. He rang the doorbell a little after midnight one Easter morning and then disappeared into the darkness, knowing full well that my wife (who had just recently demanded sworn oaths from everyone in the family that we wouldn't bring any more animals into the house) would have wrung his neck if she had gotten her hands on him.

Anyway, no pet rabbit has ever received more attention and loving care than Boogie, and Carrie has mentioned rather dramatically on numerous occasions that she simply wouldn't know what to do if anything should ever happen to her bunny -- which brings me to my story.

The other evening, not feeling particularly in the mood to be dragged all over West Sacramento by a dog, I talked my oldest son, Ty, into taking Shadow on her nightly romp. Unknown to me, shortly after Ty had departed, Carrie had also released Boogie into our front yard for her evening hop and positioned my youngest son, Kyle, to watch after her.

"Don't let her hop away," Carrie instructed Kyle.

"I won't," promised Kyle, and with that, Carrie went back into the house to return one of the numerous phone calls she is always receiving.

As Ty was returning home with Shadow, he turned the corner onto our street and like I always do, released her to gallop to our front doorstep by herself.

I only have Kyle's word for what happened next, but apparently as Shadow loped into the driveway, she spotted an uncaged Boogie, quietly munching away on a patch of succulent grass. What ensued can only be described as Longcroft Street's version of one of those Marty Stouffer's Wild America scenes where a hungry predator zeroes in on his prey and takes off after it.

Kyle, out of breath, suddenly came running into the house and yelled, "Shadow is eating Boogie! Shadow is eating Boogie!"

Panic stricken, Carrie immediately threw down the telephone and raced outside. Upon seeing Shadow hot on the heels of her beloved bunny, she let out a series of bloodcurdling screams which quickly had every neighbor on the block looking out their windows and doors to see just what kind of child abuse was going on in my front yard.

By the time I reached the scene, Ty and Carrie had both thrown their bodies into the fray and were sprawled out on the ground after unsuccessful attempts at tackling a 90-pound hunting dog who was absolutely determined to capture her first rabbit.

To make a long story short, Boogie deftly managed to somehow stay a step ahead of Shadow until Shadow finally turned the wrong corner and ran full speed into my outstretched arms. She soon tired of dragging me around the yard, came to a complete stop, and began licking my face.

Carrie stopped screaming long enough to scoop up Boogie and Ty slowly began pulling himself out of a bush. My wife picked up Kyle, who was crying because he thought the whole thing was all his fault. A few neighbors clapped, but most of them, used to the strange things which go on around my house, simply shrugged their shoulders and went back into their homes.

My middle-son, Paul, who is much too cool to involve himself in such shenanigans, and who had been watching the action from a safe distance, slowly shook his head from side to side and turned to walk away.

"Hey, get back here, Paul," I said. "You're part of this family, too, you know."

Without looking back, he yelled, "Oh no I'm not!"

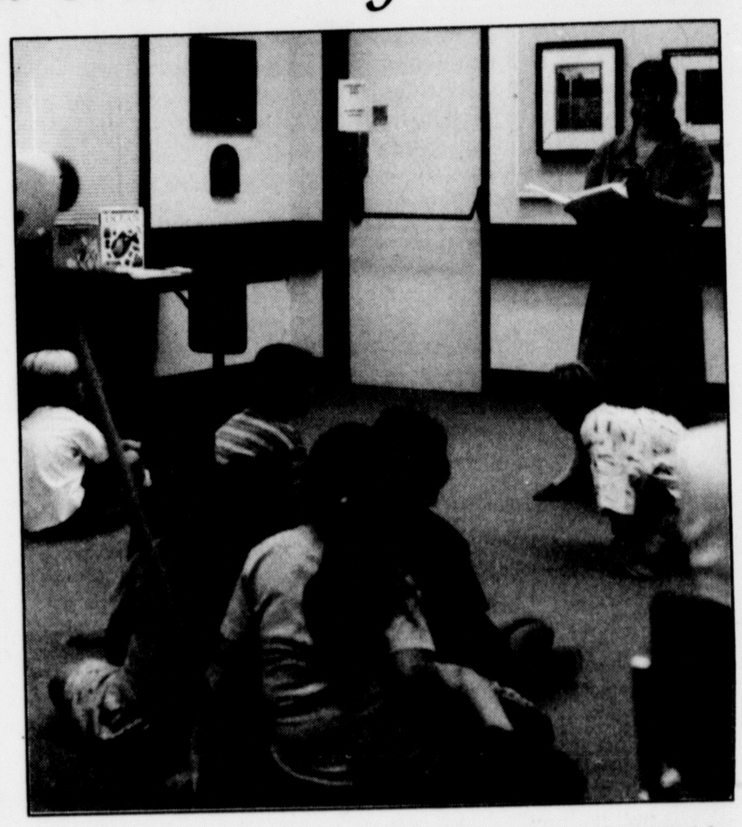

Local kids connect to Orange County sea critters by video

It was a first for the Arthur F. Turner Library, but it was also the kind of learning experience you'll be seeing a lot more of in coming years.

About 30 adults and children met Saturday morning at the library for a chance to meet tidepool creatures such as a starfish and a sea urchin in what was termed an "interactive videoconference." Speaking to a marine biologist at the Orange County Marine Institute (south of Los Angeles), the youngsters saw the biologist and his specimens displayed on a large screen on the library wall. Meanwhile, the computer relaying the images was available nearby for interested students to ask questions directly of the biologist in Orange County. Through the computer link and video camera, he could see the West Sacramento kids he was talking to.

"We are excited to be experimenting with this new window on the world," said Dale Gilliard, the libarian, in his announcement of the event. "This technology can put you face-to-face with a sea anemone in Orange County, an official in Washington, or a famous author in New York City."

The technology is still young.

Children's librarian CATHY LORDA talks to kids assembled for a teleconference with an Orange County tide pool expert

The live moving pictures being relayed through the computer at the video conference were somewhat jerky and a tad blurry. But the potential for the computer video conference for information programs appeared great.

The next such conference planned by the library will be an interactive seminar on "Getting Fit: Designing Your Personal Plan," to be held at 7 p.m. on Sept. 10. The library hopes to use the process to bring other outside experts into the local library as well.

For information, call Dale Gilliard at 375-6465.

Sports Insider —

By Rich Novoa

Just when you thought the San Francisco Giants were dead in the water, a fresh breeze brings them back to life!

That breeze turned out to be Joe Carter, who came over to the Giants in a trade with the Orioles. The former All-Star outfielder's bat provided the Giants with two weekend come-from-behind victories over the Florida Marlins. The Giants, who were in a terrible slump, got well in Florida, closing the gap to two games on the Mets and Cubs for that wild-card spot. The Giants this season won all nine games against the Marlins, who have the worst record in baseball.

The real test starts this week with a nine game homestand. First, the New York Mets come into 3Com Park for a giant three game set, then a four game series against the Phillies, followed by two games against the Expos. The Giants have a slight edge in the race for that elusive wild-card spot. The first edge is that All-Star pitcher Shawn Estes returns to the rotation on Sept. 4. But more important is that the Giants have 31 games left to play, 19 of those are at home, and they have only six games left against clubs over .500. On the other hand, the Mets also have 31 games remaining, but 22 games are on the road, while the Cubs play 20 of their final 31 games on the road.

Barry Bonds gained charter membership in the 400-400 club (400 HRs and 438 stolen bases). Bonds will be honored in a ceremony before the Sept. 18 game against the Dodgers at 3Com Park. Get your tickets for that game.

The 49ers lost their pre-season game last Sunday 21-20 to the Miami Dolphins, but more importantly, there were no major injuries. The season starts on Sept. 6 and the 49ers offense put up some good numbers against the Dolphins first-string defense. Young played into the third quarter, throwing three touchdown passes to Terrell Owens. The 49ers were leading 20-7, before Coach Mariucci put in the subs to mop up the game.

On the other hand, Miami's coach Jim Johnson played to win and the Dolphins ran all over the Niners' subs. The result -- a Miami win!

Next game is Friday night (7 p.m., Ch. 10) in Seattle against the Seahawks.

The Raiders' defensive took a couple steps backwards in their 41-7 loss to the new and improved Tampa Bay Buccaneers. The Raiders had two impressive pre-season wins over respectable Cowboys and Packers teams. The Bucs really took it to the Raiders. The only bright spot for the Raiders was Heisman Trophy winner Charles Woodson; Woodson is developing into a good pro cornerback!

The Raiders will regroup this weekend to host the Arizona Cardinals in their first pre-season game on Saturday, Aug. 29, at 1 p.m. in the Oakland Coliseum.

West Sacramento's undefeated Willie Jorrin (23-0) continues his quest for a title fight, knocking out Julio Cardona of Mexico in the second round of last Thursday's bout at the Arco. Jorrin had too much firepower for the experienced Mexican fighter, who has gone the distance with a few boxing veterans. Willie's next bout will take place at the Arco Arena in October and will be televised on ESPN against ring veteran Jesus Salud of San Diego. Next week I will preview the NFL season and have my pick for the race to Super Bowl XXXIII in Miami on January 31.

See ya next week!

such a big part of my life."

From the very beginning, John took his rowing seriously.

"Competitive rowing demands a great deal of concentration and focus," said John. "You're always trying to balance power and technique, and in that sense, rowing can be very challenging."

After John graduated from college, he wasn't ready to part with rowing, but he was finding it more and more difficult to find enough fellow athletes to practice with in the two-man, four-man, and eight-man crews he was familiar with, and that is when he began his single-boat rowing career.

"Like most athletes who have been in a good college rowing program," said John, "I had hopes of someday qualifying for the United States national team and competing in the world championships and the Olympics. But when I was in probably the best shape of my life, I decided to turn my attention to the biathlon, which consists of cross-country skiing and rifle sharpshooting. I managed to get into the top 25 or so, but rowing has always been my first love."

John just recently returned from Portland, Oregon where he competed in the Nike World Masters Games. He won two silver medals in men's lightweight single-shell rowing, one in the 36-42 year-old division, and another in the 27-35 year-old division, where he raced against younger competitors.

"Nike made a real effort to get rowers from all over the world to compete," said John, "and about 30-50 percent of the competitors were from Europe. It was a pretty demanding competition and I'm very pleased with both of my performances."

John, who won a gold medal in the World Masters Games in 1995 in Minneapolis, Minnesota, is currently involved in trying to make West Sacramento's River City Rowing Club, which is based at the Port of Sacramento, into one of the most respected programs in California.

"I joined the River City Rowing Club in 1986," said John, "and I've watched it grow to the point where we expect to have about 60 high school kids on the junior team this year. The juniors are recruited from local high schools in the area and we've got a number of really good River City High School athletes on this year's team. Beginning in early September, the varsity will be practicing about four times a week and when the spring season begins, they'll be competing against other clubs up and down the state, from Redding to San Diego. Colleges are always on the lookout for good young rowers and I expect some of our young men and women to be offered scholarships to really good schools in the future."

John's real dream is for the City of West Sacramento and the Port of Sacramento to set aside a portion of land for the creation of an Aquatic Center.

"Currently, the River City Rowing Club has a few docks, an old boat house and some other basic stuff needed for rowing competition," said John, "but not only are we running out of room, we've also been flooded three of the past four years in our current location. Hopefully, in the not too distant future, a true Aquatic Center can become part of West Sacramento's master plan. Not only would there be plenty of space for rowing, but there would also be quality facilities for sailing, canoeing, kayaking, and classes on boat safety. A West Sacramento Aquatic Center would do wonders for this area, and I'm convinced it would be a win-win situation for everyone involved."

The older John gets, the more he realizes just how much the sport of rowing has added to the quality of his life.

"Rowing is enjoyable on a number of different levels," said John. "It's good for you both physically and mentally, and it's also just a lot of fun. All I know is that there are people in their 90's who are still rowing, and I plan on being one of them."

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial

Two bits' worth

The city of West Sacramento has invited input into the design of City Hall, and the public should take the opportunity to oblige. Construction of a new civic center can do a lot for city pride and for nearby urban revitalization, and it ought to be done right.

In that vein -- and expanding this chalkboard to include planned riverfront park development in the city -- here are a couple of thoughts. There's no intention that these are the last word on the subject; only the hope that they might help get the city's creative juices flowing.

■ For city hall:

Regardless of the layout and function of the new city hall/civic center, the city ought to make some kind of visual statement beyond the ordinary. West Sacramento hasn't done that yet for local government offices. The new police station and the new county service center, for example, are both converted industrial spaces, and they look the part. The current city hall has zero appeal. A city hall should be somewhat inspiring and uplifting.

How about a bygone-era look to the planned civic center -- perhaps a 19th Century riverfront style? Or perhaps Art Deco, along the lines of the Washington Firehouse, but more pronounced? Let's stay away from the generic style of bureaucrats everywhere and let people know they're in West Sacramento when they visit this city hall.

■ For the riverfront park (where design ideas are not, actually, being invited anymore):

As a focal point and a reason to visit the riverfront walkway, would a park (or an overall theme) celebrating the region's wildflowers be feasible? The Valley is home to a number of wonderful species of wildflowers and plants, and if you're in the right place at the right time, your eyes are in for a treat. Perhaps West Sacramento can create a riverfront location where people from all over the region can go to experience such a treat.

■ As for the "Grand Staircase," envisioned as a set of concrete steps leading to water's edge on the riverfront:

Didn't the Titanic have a "Grand Staircase?"

Maybe we ought to call ours something else. (Sure, you say, West Sacramento won't sink. But that's what they said about the Titanic, too.)

Letters to the Editor

Rally, Democrats!

Tis' the morning after -- and Republicans, excited by the smell of blood, are circling in the water. But Democrats -- don't despair. In an attempt to find the silver lining, I predict the following: As a private citizen and newly divorced man, Clinton will finally be free to openly pursue younger women. Hillary will happily remarry and go on to become a modern day Eleanor Roosevelt, championing women's caus s around the world. And thirty years from now, Chelsea will become the first woman President of the United States.

Meanwhile I admit it's gagging to listen to great moral giants like Newt Gingrich and Dick Armey (who was sanctioned as a Texas University professor after complaints of sexual harassment were filed by three female graduate students) pontificate on the sins of the President. But, as usual, the sanctimonious GOP will overplay its hand.

Their plan is to pick at the President's ravished carcass until he completes his term; then riding the political high horse, trot easily through the gates of the White House. But in reality, a bedeviled Clinton will be forced to resign in order to save the Democratic platform. Gore will regally assume the Presidential mantle and reign for the next ten years. Once again, Republicans will be left scratching their pointed little heads, wondering where it all went wrong.

In time, long winded pundits will wax poetic comparing Bill Clinton to a great figure in greek tragedy -- fallen by the one fatal flaw. And in time, when the disappointment subsides, I will probably agree.

Bottom line -- even this fiasco is no excuse to stay home in November. It is more important than ever for Democrats to flock to the polls and restore the Congress to a Democratic majority.

Prieto for Yolo Sheriff

Yolo County Citizens have a chance to make a difference in selecting our next Yolo County Sheriff. As a supervisor within the Yolo County Sheriff's Office, I am endorsing Ed Prieto, a proven law enforcement leader. After careful thought I considered one important question, "Who is the most qualified person to lead our Sheriff's Office?"

I have come to know both candidates during the primary election in June and determined that Ed Prieto, has the proven leadership, management and administrative skills necessary to lead the Yolo County Sheriff's Office. Thirty one years of continuous law enforcement experience coupled with fifteen years within the management ranks of the California Highway Patrol have afforded Commander Ed Prieto the hands on experience to effectively lead the Sheriff's Office. He understands how a complicated governmental organization such as the Sheriff's Office operates and can effectively manage our Sheriff's Office to ensure quality law enforcement and services to the community.

My endorsement is based on facts. I invite you to join me and my family in supporting Ed Prieto to be our next Yolo County Sheriff.

Budget pitfalls

Gov. Wilson, using his line item veto, blue-penciled many items -- including $1.6 million from other projects to build that fence around State Capitol over disapproval of legislators. Again, no cost-of-living pay hike for most state employees -- none since the 3 per cent hike in 1995. Yet he did not mind a hike of more than $20,000 per year for himself, giving him a heftier retirement. We don't need that fence and less public access to our state capitol. What we need is punishment to fit the crimes, streamlining our judicial systems and make streets safer once again by re-opening more mental institutions as homes for those found "not guilty by reason of insanity!"

He brags about the "historical" reduction in DMV fees for vehicle registration. But he never restored that $3 billion/year he began taking from local governments about 4 years ago to cover shortfalls in education.

So, what I don't understand is this: Since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled recently that to give the president line item veto power is unconstitutional since to do so upsets the balance of powers (executive, legislative and judicial), then why isn't line item veto also unconstitutional at state level? While I realize we have a state and a federal constitution, it seems like too often we read about a state initiative voted into law by voters only to have it overturned/nullified by a federal court! State has courts and bi-cameral (two-house) legislature as does Congress. So if line item veto is wrong for the president -- because it would give that Chief Executive too much power, high court should rule likewise for this state's chief executive, too. Wonder how the high court would rule on this...

Finally, let's give ourselves one more year to deal with the "year 2000 problem." Where we have but 2 spaces to write our year, let's just type 2K in lieu of 2,000; e.g., "01-01,2K," rather than "01-01-2000."

Starr probe unconstitutional

Those guys in Washington just don't seem to get it! Sex is not the business of Big Government. Peeking under the President's bed sheets for stains of misbehavior is in itself morally wrong. Who empowered Republicans to set loose Starr and his Federal Moralists on Clinton and his minions? The law the $40 million-dollar-man, Kenneth Starr, is using to do so is unconstitutional.

Starr's legacy will be seen historically the same as that of the likes of Joseph R. McCarthy and Mitchell A. Palmer (the government men who chased Reds instead of semen).

Who cannot see that unconstitutionality of the independent counsel law? Any law that allows an office of government unlimited funds and authority to investigate the leadership of a single and particular branch of government while ignoring other branches (such as Congress, the Supreme Court) has to be on the face of it unconstitutional. If the law were broadened to include members of Congress and members of the Supreme Court, then it would, perhaps, be constitutional, since all branches of government would then be covered by the same mandate thus preserving the balance of powers.

In the meantime, the presidency has been diminished for years to come by people who blame Democrats for the Nixon debacle, who fear the wrath of the religious right, who sneer at the thought of a hillbilly like Willy at the helm of the ship of state, outmaneuvering them at every corner.

form of ammonia, and most fertilizers at both facilities readily convert to ammonia in water. The other is that they do cause aquatic plants to grow -- you get the algae growing in the deep water channel, using up oxygen, and you have a situation like they have in Clear Lake. The algae uses oxygen, leaving it unavailable for other aquatic life.

The release of nitrogen in the form of nitrates also poses a potential threat to the water's quality as drinking waterin the Delta, McHenry added.

John Sulpizio, director of the Port of Sacramento, said his facility is instituting different measures to try to control the washing of fertilizers into the port by rainwater.

"We have established runoff analysis during storm events," he said. "There were elevated levels of nitrate and ammonia content in some of those samples. It's fairly clear to us ammonia and nitrates can be released by fertilizer."

So the port is trying to train its personnel and modify its equipment to reduce the amount of fertilizer which can become part of the rainwater runoff.

"We have over a period of time introduced many management practices that make an effort to control fertilizer and keep it under the roof," said Sulpizio.

Possible future capital investments include scrapers on port conveyor belts or a possible wetlands development to receive the runoff and deal with the fertilizers naturally.

Inspector McHenry said he was aware of no health threat from the water quality problem at the port.

time, leading to poorly treated sewage releases into the Sacramento River.

"It used to be a summertime phenomenon, that the violations tended to be significantly worse," he commented. "We haven't seen that over the last couple of years."

He credited the new sewage plant procedures as well as a strong city industrial "pre-treatment" program for the improvement.

West Sac's Betty Sokolich featured in show

The September Art Exhibit at the Arthur Turner Library will be recent watercolor paintings by the West Sacramento artist, Betty Fairbairn Sokolich.

The artist has been involved in art for many years and has exhibited a variety of media in many juried competitive shows in Northern California. Watercolor has been her main focus in the last few years. A retired high school art teacher (St. Francis High School and Del Campo High School) she continues to share her enthusiasm for art by teaching a class at the West Sacramento Senior Center.

Sokolich is a charter member of Yolo County Art Council; Water Color Artists of the Sacramento Horizons (President '93 to '95, presently vice president); and West Sacramento Art Guild, as well as Kappa Delta Pi, AAUW, and is a board member of the Yolo County Library Advisory Board.

The artist is intrigued with the challenge of interpreting and confining three dimensional space on to a small two dimensional surface using color, form, line, textures, light and dark values in an expressive way. She records her impressions, preferably on location of her travels around the world.

Recent recognitions lately include "Art From the Heart" from YCAC, and 1998 "Woman of the Year" from West Sacramento Rotary Club.

Sokolich is a lover of flowers and they, too, are often motivations for a painting.

The public is cordially invited to attend a reception for the artist to be held on September 26, from 2 to 4 p.m.

The exhibits are sponsored by the Friends of the Library.

Civic center design

From Art Schroeder
Community Relations
Redevelopment &
Housing Agency
City of West Sacramento

The proposed downtown Civic Center can finally bring together in one location the many functions of the city. The Civic Center complex will accommodate most department offices, while adding both a community center and a senior center. The planned 70,000 square foot complex will be located at Merkley and West Capitol Avenue.

On Wednesday, August 26, the public is invited to the first in a series of workshops to discuss plans and share comments about the Civic Center project. The workshop will begin at 7 p.m. in the city council chambers at City Hall, 2101 Stone Blvd. The program will include presentations by city staff and the architectural firm of Vitiello Associates, Inc. The public will have the opportunity to review and comment on the first conceptual sketches of proposed Civic Center site.

Currently, the West Sacramento City Council Chambers, administration and the department offices for finance, fire and redevelopment and housing are located in City Hall on Stone Blvd. Uniting with these departments in the new Civic Center complex would be community development and community services, which are presently located at 1951 South River Road.

The new Civic Center complex will include a 10,000 square foot, stand-alone facility for the West Sacramento Senior Center, which will retain its current site at 664 Cummins Way. A $500,000 federal grant will be applied to construction of the additional senior center, providing close proximity to the central business district and Margaret McDowell Manor, the affordable senior housing complex planned for spring 1999.

The public discussion about the new Civic Center will also include ideas for a community center for special events.

Wednesday evening's workshop welcomes community questions and input as the process of planning the new Civic Center begins.
